Trujillo's Banana Coast Port

June 7th, 2010 · No Comments

The developers of the first mainland cruise port in Central America say they are negotiating with cruise lines about who will call when it opens in 2012.

The $20 million Banana Coast port is scheduled to open in the town of Trujillo, Honduras. The name reflects one of the region's agricultural products.

The cruise destination development project is led by Grande Trujillo Autoridad – a partnership involving the municipality of Trujillo, local landowners led by Life Vision Properties and Miami-based Global Destinations Development.

“This project will create a sustainable landside tourism industry, coupled with a custom-built cruise port infrastructure in a destination that combines ecotourism and soft adventure opportunities for cruise line guests,” Life Vision Developments CEO Randy Jorgensen said in a news release.

Development of new Caribbean ports is important to business in South Florida because they help to attract veteran cruisers who are looking for new Caribbean destinations from Port Everglades and the Port of Miami.
